

Dear FCC,As a business traveler, it is important to be able to be in touch with my clients even when on board an airplane. However, I recognize the the privacy rights of my fellow passengers. While I am in favor of lifting the ban on mobile phone use in flight, I think it should be allowed in designated areas only (such as the galley areas), or be restricted if fellow passengers object. Certainly internet and text messaging should be allowed.